The curriculum for the primary school in Sweden was changed in 2022. Sex education is no longer a few lessons in 8-grade. It is now integrated and taught across most subjects starting in 0-grade. The change takes place in the same way in other European countries when the EU introduces the WHO's standard for sex education.

The standard states that the school should encourage preschoolers to masturbate and feel pleasure when they touch their own body. They view our children as sexual beings from birth and therefore schools must start sex education as early as possible.

Although we know better, children are increasingly exposed to adult sexuality, not only by perpetrators, via pornography and social media, but now also in the classroom.
